There was proof of progress in the young woman's ale art, a progress which made more probable the fulfilment of the promise distorment of Beethoven's E major sonata, opus 109. It was therefore with special pleasure that the sensitive listener could hear her Chopin group. She played the C sharp minor mazurka, opus 30, No. 4, in a manner unsurpassably beautiful. In inc. clean incleive crispness of rhythm, in nice balance of phrase, in clarity of finger work and in variety of tone it was delightful. The other mazurka on her programme, opus 58, No. 3, was equally well played.

The B major nocturne showed Miss Renard's yet superficial art at its best. In this gentle and meditative composition her unimpassioned joy in sheer melody and tonal tints made the piano purr with responsive satisfaction. A group of five Debussy numbers called forth the young woman's best technical qualities and evoked much applause. Her programme began with Busoni's Her programme began with Busoni's ponderous disarrangement of Bach's violin chaconne, and ended with Balakirev's variegated technical debauch called "Islamey." Masquerading circus music as it is, the latter is the better of the two, for it does not misrepresent any composer except Balakirev. Mr. Busoni has drowned a noble inspiration of Bach in a pianist's teacup tempest. Poor Bach! He has had a hard fate, since so many of his organ fugues and other works have had to furnish ideas to composers who had none of their own. De-
